Introduction

One of the key principles behind the Emergency Management Act (EMA) is that critical infrastructure protection (CIP) is an integral part of modern emergency management. Public Safety Canada's responsibilities under both the EMA and the Department of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness Act, include facilitating the sharing of information to strengthen emergency preparedness and public safety.

The ability to exchange specific and reliable information in a timely manner with the private sector is essential to the government's role in providing national leadership in emergency management and CIP. Assessing threats and vulnerabilities, improving warning and reporting capabilities, analyzing attacks to develop better defences and responses, are the primary goals of information sharing under the EMA.

Timely information provided by the private sector will enable better understanding of CI sector interdependencies and the state of preparedness in CI sectors. It will also enable the government to better adjust national plans, promote risk reduction measures and enhance resiliency in Canada's CI. It will enable the government to improve its capability to provide more useful information products to its stakeholders. During emergency situations, effective information exchange among CI partners is essential for accurate situational awareness and efficient and effective operational response.

The EMA includes a consequential amendment to the Access to Information Act that allows the Government of Canada to protect specific critical infrastructure information supplied in confidence to the government by third parties. Private sector partners should note that critical infrastructure information can be protected under this exemption only if it is appropriately marked and is treated as confidential by the entity that provides the information. It should also be noted that exemptions from disclosure for reasons of national security and public safety already exist under federal/provincial/territorial access to and freedom of information legislation.

The end result of these efforts to promote information sharing will be the development of a more coherent approach to emergency management at the national level and thereby ensure the maximum utility of the EMA.

The following information is a more detailed guide to the consequential amendment to the Access to Information Act pursuant to the EMA.

Guide to Access to Information Act (ATIA) paragraph 20(1)(b.1)

1. What is paragraph 20(1)(b.1)?

- Subsection 20(1) of the Access to Information Act is amended by adding the following provision after paragraph (b):

(b.1) “information that is supplied in confidence to a government institution by a third party for the preparation, maintenance, testing or implementation by the government institution of emergency management plans within the meaning of section 2 of the Emergency Management Act and that concerns the vulnerability of the third party’s buildings or other structures, its networks or systems, including its computer or communications networks or systems, or the methods used to protect any of those buildings, structures, networks or systems “

- This is a mandatory exemption (“the head of a government institution shall refuse to disclose any record requested under this Act that contains [...]”). This means that the information must not be disclosed, unless conditions specified in the ATIA are met. These include:
 - the third party consented to the disclosure; or
 - the information constitutes results of product or environmental testing carried out by the government for the third party at no cost; or
 - the disclosure would be in the public interest as it relates to public health, public safety or protection of the environment.
- Government institutions must consult third parties when a request has been received under the ATIA and the institution intends to disclose records that contain or may contain third party information (see question #11 and Annex 1 for more details).

2. Why is paragraph 20(1)(b .1) necessary as a consequential amendment under the Emergency Management Act (EMA)?

- The ability to rapidly exchange specific and reliable information in a timely manner with the private sector is essential to the Government’s role in providing national leadership in emergency management and critical infrastructure protection. Assessing threats and vulnerabilities, improving warning and reporting capabilities, analyzing attacks to develop better defenses and responses, are the primary goals of information sharing under the EMA.

- The intent of this exemption is to enhance information sharing between the Government of Canada (GC) and the private sector. As the private sector owns or operates over 85% of Canada's critical infrastructure (CI), such information is necessary to obtain an accurate picture of the state of CI resilience in Canada.
- The GC is not in a position to compel the private sector to share sensitive critical infrastructure/emergency management (CI/EM) information by regulation or other legislated means because Canada's CI sectors operate in a complex regulatory environment governed by multiple jurisdictions. The GC therefore promotes voluntary information sharing mechanisms with the private sector.
- CI/EM information is, by its nature, highly sensitive. Consequently, prudent CI/EM owners/operators take appropriate action to ensure that this information remains confidential. This exemption is required to remove any doubt as to whether such information will be protected if they choose to share it with the GC. Inappropriate release of such information could potentially cause harm to CI owners/operators by putting the security of their physical and cyber infrastructure at risk

3. When does paragraph 20(1)(b.1) apply?

- As all other exemptions, when there is a formal request under the ATIA.
- When the requested record is under the control of a government institution, i.e., when the institution has legal or physical possession of the record.

4. What criteria have to be met in order to apply this exemption?

- The information must meet the following conditions to qualify for this exemption:
 - The information is provided for the preparation, maintenance, testing or implementation by the government institution of emergency management plans within the meaning of section 2 of the Emergency Management Act and for uses consistent with this purpose.
 - The information must be about the vulnerability of the third party's buildings or other structures, its networks or systems, including its computer or communication networks or systems, or the methods to protect any of these. No other type of information is covered by this exemption, although other provisions of the ATIA may apply.

- The record must be provided in confidence to the Government of Canada by the third party. In order to indicate confidentiality, the third party should mark its record prior to transmittal (see question #5).
- The information must be consistently treated as confidential by the third party (prior to, during and after transmittal).

5. Will records provided in confidence to the Government by a third party automatically be exempted?

- A designation of confidentiality does not of itself ensure that the information is automatically exempt from access. In the event of an ATIA request, the information will still have to be examined on a case by case basis to determine if it qualifies as information provided in confidence and if it meets the other criteria of the exemption.
- This examination will entail an assessment of the markings or transmittal documents to determine whether the information was provided to the Government in confidence, whether it was consistently treated in a confidential manner by the third party and whether it was provided for the purpose of preparing, maintaining, testing or implementing emergency management plans by the Government institution to which it was submitted.
- The information itself must be examined to determine whether it concerns the vulnerability of the third party's buildings or other structures, its networks or systems, including its computer systems or communications networks or systems, or the methods used to protect any of those buildings, structures, networks or systems.
- If there is uncertainty about the nature or the confidentiality of the information, the institution will consult the third party who provided the information to determine if it falls under paragraph 20(1)(b.1) or another paragraph of section 20, if the information is still confidential, and if the third party consents to its disclosure.
- Third party consent must be obtained by government institutions in writing, either at the time of submission, during informal consultation or in response to the notification of the intent to disclose by the government institution required by section 27 of the ATIA.
- See question # 11 and Annex 1 for additional information on third party intervention

6. What are some examples of CI/EM information to be covered by this exemption?

- Examples could include, but not necessarily be limited to:
 - vulnerability/risk assessments of critical cyber and physical infrastructure systems and networks
 - assessments of potential consequences of CI failures or disruptions, both physical and cyber
 - methods/protocols for prevention/mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery to CI vulnerabilities, disruptions or incidents
 - plans/analyses addressing CI interdependencies
 - key elements of service continuity or business resumption plans, such as special arrangements for obtaining emergency supplies to continue essential operations, alternate locations for critical operations or redundant systems, internal emergency communications protocols, etc.
 - maps/plans of critical assets, facilities, installations, communications nodes, computer networks, etc.
 - sensitive information on CI protection activities and response plans
 - defence measures to counter malicious cyber intrusions or attacks
 - techniques/protocols to protect SCADA systems
 - CI/EM information that, if it were to fall into the wrong hands, could be exploited to debilitate an organization in its recovery from a CI failure, attack or disruption
 - information that would identify the entity that supplied the information in confidence, as well as the entity on whose behalf the information has been provided.

7. Could other ATIA exemptions be used to protect this type of information in addition to paragraph 20(1)(b.1)?

- Depending on the nature of the information in question, it is possible that other exemptions could apply to CI/EM information.
- See Annex 2 for an outline of the other exemptions in the ATIA.
- Please note that the exclusions under the ATIA (sections 68, 68.1, 68.2 and 69) are not addressed in this document.

8. Does the principle of severability (section 25) apply to information qualifying for this exemption?

- Once it has been determined that a record qualifies for this exemption, consideration is required whether any part of the material can reasonably be severed.
- Reasonable severance is accomplished where a document with deletions remains meaningful and there has been no distortion in the meaning of the original text.
- Severance that results in the disclosure of disconnected snippets of information is not reasonable because what is disclosed may be meaningless or misleading as the information it contains is taken out of context, or may provide clues to the contents of the deleted portions.
- As there will be considerable variation in the form and content of CI/EM information submitted to government institutions, the determination of severability will need to be made on a case-by-case basis. Examples of information to be severed could include identification of alternate locations for essential services, locations of stockpiles of vaccines and other emergency supplies, among others (see question # 6 for additional examples).

9. Can this process be used to collect personal information and potentially infringe on the privacy of Canadians?

- There is no intention to collect personal information as part of this exercise.
- If an activity of the Government of Canada requires the collection or the sharing of personal information, the Privacy Act and any other relevant legislation will be applied to the government activity.

10. Could paragraph 20(1)(b.1) conceal from the public the failure of private sector companies to adequately identify their vulnerabilities, take action to protect their infrastructure or pollute the environment?

- It is recognized that there will be instances where it will be important to disclose this type of information in the public interest. This is the purpose of the public interest override in subsection 20(6). This discretionary provision requires the head of a government institution to exercise discretion in balancing competing public interest, that is, protecting the interests of third parties versus disclosing the information because of a greater public interest. However, subsection 20(6) does not apply to trade secrets.

- Wording has been added to subsection 20(6) to explicitly recognize that the information may be disclosed in whole or in part if the disclosure would be in the public interest as it relates to public health, public safety or the protection of the environment and, if the public interest in disclosure clearly outweighs in importance any financial loss or gain to a third party, any prejudice to the security of its structures, networks or systems, any prejudice to its competitive position or any interference with its contractual or other negotiations.
- Requesters can complain to the Information Commissioner (IC) for arm's length investigation of a refusal to disclose information and obtain a non-binding recommendation.
- If not satisfied by the IC's recommendation, or if the government institution continues to deny access to the record, the requester can apply to the Federal Court for review and a binding order.
- The IC has access to any record to which the Act applies in connection with a complaint investigation, and no such record may be withheld on any grounds.
- In litigation, disclosure of documents follows the rules of the Court

11. Will third parties have a say as to whether the information they provided will be disclosed under the Access to Information Act?

- The Act contains several provisions that permit third parties to intervene during the processing of the request, the investigation of a complaint and a review by the Federal Court.
- During the processing of the request:
 - The third party is given an opportunity to make written representations when a government institution intends to disclose records that contain or may contain third party information (paragraph 28(1)(a)).
 - The third party may apply to the Federal Court for a review of the decision of the institution (section 44).
- During the investigation of a complaint:
 - The third party is given an opportunity to make representations to the Information Commissioner (subsection 35(2)).
 - The Information Commissioner reports the result of the investigation to the third party that made representations (subsection 37(2)).

- If the government institution decides, on the recommendation of the Information Commissioner, to disclose the records, it gives notice of the decision to the third party (section 29).

- The third party may apply to the Federal Court for a review of the decision of the institution (section 44).

- During a review by the Court:
 - If the requester or the Information Commissioner applies to the Federal Court for a review of the decision of the institution not to disclose the information, the institution must advise the third party (subsection 43(1)).

 - The third party may appear as a party to the review (subsection 43(2)).
